GENERAL NEWS.

Washington News.

TILDEN'S CANDIDACY.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Post of to-morrow will contain the following, which seems to settle the question of Tilden's candidacy: At a meeting of the friends of Tilden, held in New York on Saturday, a declaration was made by Tilden that he would be a candidate for the democratic nomination. The Post questions whether he can carry New York, and without that the nomination is impossible.

INDIAN RIGHTS.

The following joint resolution was introduced by Senator Morgan:—

Whereas, It is declared in the fourteenth amendment of the constitution that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside, and that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the protection of law,

Resolved, That the Indians born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are persons within the constitution, and such persons are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside are subject to the jurisdiction of the government of the United States.

Morgan wanted the resolution placed on the calendar that the relations between the government and these tribes might be determined. It was finally referred to the judiciary committee.

PUBLIC DEBT.

The reduction in the public debt for the month of February, as will be seen by the official statement, was over $5,500,000, notwithstanding the fact that over $6,000,000 was paid out during that month on account of pensions. The total revenues during the month were larger than those ever received before during the month of February under the present revenue laws, amounting to very nearly $1,000,000 a day. The receipts for customs during the month amounted to $16,800,000, while in the corresponding month of 1879, they amounted to only $10,800,000. Precautions.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 4. The most extraordinary precautions were taken on the anniversary of the czar's accession to preserve order. Every possible coign of vantage was guarded against explosion or conspiracy.

Another Western Union Victory.

The Hill Scandal.

CHICAGO, March 4. The Times' Washington special says that Mrs. Lockwood denies that she instituted proceeding against Senator Hill, of Georgia, on her own account, but that Miss Raymond ordered her to do so.

ATLANTA, GA., March 4. The Jessie Raymond suit has created a sensation her. She is a well known blackmailer.

New Way of Treating Ore.

NEW YORK, March 4. Mr. Edison devotes his spare time to perfecting a plan for obtaining gold of already cast-away ore. He satisfied a number of mining engineers and capitalists so well of his claim that a company is organized to work the tailings of the furnaces of the great mines. Fifty thousand dollars was obtained at Leadville and Virginia City. The process is a secret, but quicksilver is used, also oxide of lead, carbonate of soda, charcoal dust and powdered glass.

Blaine's Chances.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The Washington special to the Journal says your correspondent asked Wm. E. Chandler, Senator Blaine's trusted friend, to-day upon what he based his claim that Blaine would recieve the republican nomination at Chicago. He answered, upon the vote of the Illinois delegation which we are certain will be cast for him and not for Grant. The advices we get from Illinois are that Grant is not as popular there as his friends claim, and General Logan and Mr. Washburn will not be able to influence the delegation to cast its vote for Grant. Without the vote of Illinois, Grant will not be nominated; but with the vote of the state cast for Blaine, the latter will be certain to get the nomination.

Chinamen in Chicago.

CHICAGO, March 4.—Chinamen are arriving here and in New York and a considerable number are expected. It is creating a good deal of sensation and opinions divide as to the good or bad influence on business.

Smyth Retained.

ALBANY, March 4.—The Express announces Smyth's successor will not be appointed by the governor and he will hold office during the term.

Vindicating the Law.

DANVILLE, VA., March 4. Judge Rives acting under the supreme court decision caused the arrest of Judges Cole and Parrish, not to punish the judges but to vindicate the law.

Tilden's Word for It.

NEW YORK, March 4. The Evening Post sent a reporter to Tilden's house this morning who learned positively no such meeting as that described in the Washington Post this morning in which Tilden declared himself a candidate for the presidential nomination has taken place.

Theodore Thomas.

CINCINNATI, March 4. It is understood that the music college directors refuse to comply with the demand of Theodore Thomas for certain changes in the management. He will probably resign.

Quick Punishment.

Vanderbilt has now $26,000,000 in U. S. registered four per cent. bonds.

A private letter from a prominent citizen in Indiana to a citizen in this place says that Blaine is the favorite in that state, and that Grant is nowhere.

The war, blood and thunder, extermination papers have our sympathies. The Utes will go without a war. The tragedies, which they have gloated over, wont take place.

The railroads don't care much about the decision of the ways and means committee in regard to steel rails. It is not their funeral. Those transporting freight will pay for it.

The Blaine movement is in most danger from the abundance of candidates for vice president. Among these are Ingalls in Kansas, Ferry in Michigan, Oglesby in Illinois, and Harrison in Indiana.

It has taken Secretary Schurz since last September to ascertain that there is no law to punish the guilty Utes. Leadville Democrat.

But then he has secured the removal of the Utes in the way which he proposed and hence Colorado ought not to grumble.

Silence, dodging and straddling on public questions is the thing for politicians but it will not do for journalists. They must express their opinions as they are formed, with each succeeding day. Denver News.

The News is thoroughly consistent. If it had an hourly edition, it would express its opinions as they are formed with each succeeding hour.

The Leadville Democrat contained a rumor that a Sherman club was being formed in Denver. If this should be done it would call forth an amount of sentiment in favor of Sherman which will astonish the Grant party. It is of no benefit to Colorado to have the sectional issue stirred up, while it is a positive benefit to Colorado to place our finances on a sound basis.

Some of the Grant papers are referring to the resolution passed at the last state convention as binding on the republicans. This is absurd. It was sprung on the convention by a republican who wanted to be conspicuous and never has been regarded as the opinion of the party. No one wanted to oppose it at the time, because it was not considered of enough importance.

It is absurd to speak of Governor Pitkin as having helped materially to secure the removal of the Utes. He opposed steadfastly until he went to Washington all the plans of Secretary Schurz for the settlement of the Indian question. These plans now have been proven the wisest and best, having secured the removal of the Utes without bloodshed. Yet Governor Pitkin's friends claim the credit for him.

Mr. Theron Stevens and M. S. Corbett, of Ouray, wrote a letter to the last Solid Muldoon which was intended to be severe on the GAZETTE. The only reply we need to make is that Governor Pitkin himself now admits the danger was overestimated, which was what we alleged. In regard to the precise contents of the petition we are unacquainted. We criticised the telegraphic summary, a fact which we invariably stated. This was fair because it was what was represented in the press reports all over the country.

The following deserved tribute has been paid to one of the purest and ablest men in active politics, by the Providence Star: "George William Curtis resists corruption in the party. He is out-spoken, clean and honest. He is a republican with a conscience. He desires the purity and perpetuity of the party in its purity. Corruptionists and party tricksters hate him and his manly words. His republicanism is of the school of Sumner, Wilson, Lincoln and the founders of the party. The party leaders of to-day impeach his loyalty to the party and read him out of it. It is not the first time in history that the corrupt defame the virtuous."

Alexander Stephens, in his speech of a few days ago on the subject of attaching riders to appropriation bills, discussed some very fundamental principles which demand attention at this time. He said: "The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Hurd) had said the other day that it was democratic doctrine to seek redress of grievances by withholding appropriations. He (Mr. Stephens) repudiated that proposition. That had never been democratic doctrine. It was monarchial doctrine. It came from England, where the withholding of appropriations was a legitimate mode of seeking a redress of grievances. These powers were not divided as they were here. There all sovereign powers were considered as inherent in the crown. Here there was a different kind of government. Here the several powers were divided into three departments of government—the legislative, the executive and the judicial—each co-ordinate and co equal, and each within itself exercising sovereign powers. In the constitution of the United States the "redress of grievances" was not provided for by withholding the necessary supplies. The redress of grievances in this country was, first, by petition to the legislative body; next, to the judiciary, and next, to the ballot box. Under the constitution the executive had the same rightful and constitutional power to veto a bill as the house and the senate had to pass it, and the new doctrine of making war upon the veto power through the means of appropriation bills was not democratic, was not republican, but anti-constitutional." The republicans at the time of the impeachment of President Johnson, made the same mistake as the democrats are now making. They looked on the president as their instrument, whereas the executive is a co-ordinate branch of the government endowed by the constitution with a third of the legislature power.

A New Yorker's Opinion.

When Mr. Chaffee told a prominent citizen of Leadville that Colorado was for Grant he told the plain unvarnished truth. Pueblo Chieftain.

A New Union.

The Denver Times is now employing some half dozen lady compositors. The girls are opposed to unions when the membership runs above two a president and financial secretary. Leadville Chronicle.

Too Previous.

Judge Belford's boom was started "too previous," as it were. It has been so long on its feet and has been knocked and battered about so that the thing is growing weak, and will hardly survive until the republican convention. Leadville Democrat.

The Grand Review.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended Governor Pitkin to come up and review the army of the Gunnison before the departure for the Ute reservation. If he can't come by the first of May, we shall expect his gubernatorial blessing by letter. Leadville Chronicle.

A Narrow Escape.

The decision of the republican state convention to instruct for Grant may be said to have depended upon one vote in a single district convention, and that one vote was cast by Frederick Hoerschele, of the eighth ward of Utica. If Mr. Hoerschele had voted in the district convention as he pledged himself to vote, Senator Conkling would not have been admitted to the convention as representative of the first district of Oneida; and if Mr. Conkling had not been a member of the convention, the resolutions instructing the Chicago delegation to vote for Grant would have been defeated by a majority at least as large as that they received. In seeking to explain his violation of his pledges, Mr. Hoerschele declared that he was a Conkling man, but was earnestly opposed to a third term for Grant. Yet he acted in a way that made his vote more potent for the third term than that of any other caucus delegate in the state. It is worth while to recall these circumstances to show how men deceive themselves, or pretend to deceive themselves for the purpose of deceiving others. Utica Herald.

Mr. Cyrus W. Field had at last accounts, returned to London from the Continent, and was preparing for his return voyage to America.

Christine Nilsson received a present from the young queen of Spain of a magnificent pearl set in diamonds, when she departed from Madrid to Paris.

Like Tennyson, Mr. Longfellow is said to write very slowly. His manuscript shows no erasures, but he tears proofs to pieces mercilessly, and is said to have rewritten the "Divine Tragedy" after it was in type.

Miss Charlotta Angus Scott, the young lady who has won the unparalleled distinction of a position equal to "eighth wrangler" in the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge University, is twenty-two and the daughter of a minister.

Phillips Brooks, of Boston, is invited to become president of the Pennsylvania University, and, although it is said he has not yet decided upon an answer, his place is so manifestly in the pulpit that Trinity is not likely to lose its eloquent pastor.

The fees for opinions and law arguments which Judge Benjamin Robbins Curtis received during the seventeen years after he retired from the bench of the United States Supreme Court, in 1857, amounted to $650,000. His salary had been only $8,000 a year.

In Mrs. Lucy Hamilton Hooper's new novel, called "Under the Tricolor, or the American Colony in Paris," Mrs. Bryan is intended for Mrs. J. W. Mackay, and Miss Emma Fairmont is Miss Emily Schomberg, of Philadelphia. The book has created a great sensation in Paris.

Writing of Wilkie Collins, the London correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle says: "He is a very hard worker. He writes, rewrites, corrects, erases and interlineates until little of the original copy is left. He is very conscientious about style. He does not believe that a single word too many should be employed, and he cleaves rigorously to idiomatic expressions. You have observed, no doubt, that his English, especially in his later works, is terse, clear and strong, and carefully adapted to the topic in hand. While he enjoys getting a large price for his books he never permits greed to prevail over his literary conscientiousness. He never lets anything go to the printer until he has done his best. Before he puts pen to paper he forms the centre plot. He admits that this is his severest effort, and when it is accomplished he begins to write deliberately and regularly. He generally devotes five, sometimes six, hours per day to composition, and is more or less facile, according to his mood. He seldom writes fast; but once under way, he keeps steadily at his work. He prefers the early day for his tasks—between 10 o'clock a. m. and 3 or 4 o'clock p. m. and pursues them with earnestness and energy. He never, I believe, writes at night. When he has finished a novel he usually takes a vacation, thinking that his brain requires rest. He has a good library in his house, but reads a few books simply for entertainment, most of his reading being undertaken with a view to his trade."

THE COLORADO SPRINGS GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1880.

Sir Humphry Davy.

Davy's personal appearance was suggestive of anything but mental power. His face was the reverse of comely. He was small and insignificant, and even in the morning of his manhood stooped and was round-shouldered. He was uncouth and clumsy in his manners; and when he first began his career as a lecturer at the Royal Institution, there was a smile of self satisfaction on his face, which suggested that he was on the best terms with himself, and which predisposed his audience rather to hiss than cheer. He was somewhat dogmatic withal, and once received a snub which must have been galling to his self-esteem. A London publisher, whose habit was to entertain the literati in England at his table once a week, invited the assistant lecturer on chemistry among them, a half formed nebula among the fixed stars. The worthy publisher was doubtful about Davy's right to sit down with men of European fame, and apologized to the company for venturing to introduce to them one whose name had yet to be made, and whose looks promised so little. The raw, ramshackle, awkward young man, however, was quite able to hold his own, and prepared to assert his right to contribute to the literary and philosophical discussion; and being just at that age when young men think all men fools and "fogies" who are older than themselves, he even ventured to pose as an oracle and instructor. The conversation turned on the poetic beauties of Milton. In the middle of a declamation of one of the poet's finest passages by an enthusiastic admirer, Davy interposed the infelicitous remark that "he could never understand Milton." Here was an opportunity for which the great men were wistfully waiting to sit on and quash this obtrusive, beardless dogmatist. "Very likely, sir," said one of them; "nothing more likely; but you don't mean to blame the poet for that." His stooping gait, discordant voice, and bovine countenance produced so unfavorable an impression on Count Rumford that that gentleman expressed regret that he had so hastily invited him to become a lecturer in connection with the institution. He refused to allow Davy to lecture in the theatre till his qualifications had been tested in the smaller lecture room. It is needless to say that he passed the ordeal triumphantly; the count's first exclamation after the lecture was, "Let this lad have free access to all the arrangements and helps the institution can afford." On the succeeding day he discoursed in public. His subsequent career is a record of triumphs. His lectures were a new dissipation for the frivolous, a revelation to the wise. The sensation they created and the admiration they obtained can hardly be realized. Men of the highest genius and of the most exalted rank, the literary and the scientific, the practical and the poetical, blue stockings and butterflies, the fresh in mind and the faded—all crowded to hear him. * * * Ever untraveled, his thoughts returned to his laboratory, and though he did set up as a man of fashion, he never forgot to keep his ambition subordinate to that of scientific fame. He would remain calmly conducting his experiments till he left himself no time to dress for dinner, and in his haste would "clothe himself upon with white and clean linen without unclothing himself of that which had ceased to be sweet and fresh." One day it would be of aldermanic proportions, wearing a wardrobe of five shirts on his back and five pairs of stockings on his calves, till he was able to snatch an hour from science and frivolity, and then he would appear, to the consternation of his friends, but a shadow of his former greatness. These alterations of physical bulk were matters of sore perplexity and alarm, till the cause of them was discovered. His day was too short for the service of the two opposing deities. He would serve science till the hour to present his offering to fashion arrived; and then he would dart out of his laboratory and run a neck-and-neck race with time. When the solemnities of folly were over he would return to his laboratory and remain in it till three or four in the morning, and the servants of the institution often found him at his post when they arrived next day.—Temple Bar.

Books which were Not Thought Worth the Printing.

All the world knows the history of "Jane Eyre;" how it was written in the gray old parsonage under the Yorkshire hills, how the rough notes, sketched hastily in pencil, were transcribed in a neat hand as legible as print, and how the manuscript, in its brown-paper wrapper, was sent off from the small station house at Keighley to publisher after publisher, only to find its way back again. "Returned with thanks," till the packet, scored all over with publishers' names, and, well-nigh worn out by its travels, found its way into the hands of Messrs. Smith & Elder, with a stamped envelope inside for a reply. This story of "Jane Eyre" is, with authors who cannot find a publisher, one of standing sources of consolation, and it is a very striking instance of the loose way in which publishers' readers now and then look through manuscripts that find their way into their hands, even if it does not prove that publishers, like women, though they cant about genius, cannot divine its existence till all the world point with the hand; for Messrs. Smith & Elder's reader was so struck with the tale that, Scot as he was, he sat up half the night to finish it. But some allowance ought to be made even for the readers, for it must be dull, tedious work to spell out the plot of a story, or to find the proofs of genius in a loose pile of manuscript which you can hardly perhaps decipher except with a glass, and perhaps not always with that. Francis Jeffrey knew so well the difficulty of forming an opinion upon an article from reading it in manuscript, that in sending his first article to the Edinburgh Review, after he had relinquished the editorship, he stipulated that Mr. Napier should not attempt to read it until he could read it in type; and the editor of the Saturday Review, a few years ago, used to have every article that seemed at all worth publishing set up in type before he made up his mind whether to accept or reject it. Everything, as Charles Lamb used to say, is apt to read so raw in manuscript. It is the most difficult thing in the world to know how an article will read from looking at it in manuscript, so difficult that even authors themselves, men of long varied experience, men like Moore and Macaulay, could seldom form an opinion upon their own writings until they saw how they looked in print. And when that is the case with the author, how must it be with the publisher or his reader, and with the editor of a publication, who has to make up his mind about the merits of half a dozen manuscripts in the course of a morning! Yet, after all, I suspect that very few articles and very few books that are worth printing are lost to the world, for the competition among publishers for manuscripts is only one degree less keen than the competition among authors for publishers, and an author who has anything worth printing is seldom long without a publisher. I happen to know the secret history of a book which has long since taken its rank among the classics of English literature. I mean "Eothen." It was written years and years before it was published; written with care and thought; revised in the keenest spirit of criticism, and kept under lock and key for a long time. It is a book which, as far as workmanship goes, exemplifies in a very striking form Shenstone's rule for good writing, "Spontaneous thought, labored expression," and there are few books of travel which equally abound in adventure, incident, sketches of character, and personal romance. It is, as Lockhart well said, an English classic. But when Alexander Kinglake offered it to the publishers, they refused it one and all, refused it upon any terms, and the author at last, out of conceit with his manuscript and perhaps with himself, walked into a book seller's shop in Pall Mall, explained the adventures of the manuscript, and made it a present to the publisher if he thought it worth printing. The first edition lingered a little on his hands, till a notice in the Quarterly Review, from the pen of Lockhart, called attention to it, and the printer's difficulty after that was to keep pace with the demand. I hope I am not violating any confidence by adding that the publisher, year by year, for many years, sent Mr. Kinglake a check for £100 every Christmas day.—Belgravia.

Traits of Overworked Men.

Nothing could have been kinder, for example, than the act of Sir Walter Scott, writing out sermons for a young aspirant to the Scottish ministry, whose state of nerves made him unable to grapple with the task and satisfy his presbytery. Similar, though in a quite different sphere, was the kindness shown by Vinet, at Lausanne, to a peasant woman who invaded his solitude one Sunday morning. Overcome by toil and illness, Vinet had been obliged to forbid the visits of strangers, and his family were guarding him with all possible care. The woman was an intelligent, God fearing peasant, who had never succeeded in getting rest for her spirit, but having fallen in with one of Vinet's books, she was persuaded that if she could only see him, he would be able to give her the needed guidance. With much difficulty she got admission to his room. We can fancy the anxious relatives enjoining her to detain him as short a time as possible. But Vinet, when he heard her story, was profoundly interested, and spent the whole day with her, up to the hour of the last stage coach. The account which the woman gave to her own pastor, on returning home, was interesting. "Well," said the pastor, "have you been able to see him?" "Yes," she replied, "and at last I have found one who has humbled me." "Humbled you! M. Vinet is not the man to humble any one." "Yes, humbled me, and humbled me profoundly. In contact with his humility and goodness I felt all my pride give way." Then she told how thoroughly he comprehended her case, how patiently he spent the whole day with her, and all in such a homely way that she felt as if he was her brother. A few days after, Vinet sent her a book newly published, as if she had been one of his chosen friends.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A freighting outfit of fourteen wagons, from the end of the South Park track, passed through town yesterday, bound for the Black Hills. It was at first supposed that the grand rush for the Gunnison had begun.

We understand that Judge Field, of Indiana, who spent a few weeks here a year ago, intends to make this his permanent residence. He has secured a fine building lot, and proposes to make other real estate investments in this city.

The Old Town prize spelling school, which was postponed last Friday evening, will be held to night, if the weather will permit. A good time is anticipated. Some excellent music may be expected. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

General Danford left for Leadville on the evening express yesterday. Mrs. Danford, who is very much of an invalid, accompanied the general as far as Denver, where she will remain a month or two, hoping that the change may be beneficial to her health.

Mr. W. Z. Bills, of Carrolton, Missouri, has leased Mr. Jacob Becker's stone quarry for ten years and will at once put in machinery and begin to take out stone and make contracts for putting up houses. Those who contemplate building will do well to see Mr. Bills before completing their arrangements.

We are glad to learn that Mr. John Hundley, the energetic young business man, formerly a member of the firm of Woodgate & Hundley, has associated himself in business with M. C. Wilbur one of the best livery establishments in the state. We learn the new firm will add to the already magnificent stock several new carriages and buggies, and they propose not to be outdone by any of their neighbors in their line of business.

Dr. Gibbons, who lectured here a number of times last year, and who was struck by lightning while descending Pike's Peak, is now in Denver. He has been lecturing on temperance for the last three years, and says he has hardly made his expenses. He can now lecture with less thought for the morrow, as the United States pension office sent him $3,600 back pension last Wednesday, and will continue to issue to him at the rate of $17 a month.

A Valuable Horse Instantly Killed.

We have learned the following particulars of the accident which caused the death of Judge Williams' valuable horse. The judge is living at his country residence, about three miles from town, and is in the habit of driving home to his dinner. He had driven to his home, which is on quite an elevation above his stable, and his colored man was asked to hitch the horse and cover him with a blanket. The man failed to hitch him, and the horse walked off slowly to reach the stable, which is near the house. In making his way to cross the bridge, the buggy failed to strike the bridge with two wheels, which caused it to upset, and this threw the horse on his side, his head striking a hard lump of earth and killing him instantly. The horse was one bought for the judge by M. C. Wilbur, and was considered one of the handsomest and most valuable horses in the state. He was valued at $500.

Testing the Oreoscope.

This wonderful invention, an account of which was published in the GAZETTE a few days ago has excited the attention of several of our citizens who are interested more or less in mining matters, and as so many different opinions have been expressed on its merits we deemed it our duty to call on Prof. Troctor at Manitou, and ascertained what he had to say on the subject. We found the professor before a barrel filled with dirt slowly moving the oreoscope over its surface.

"Yes," said the venerable scientist, "I received the instrument yesterday from Mr. X of your city and I immediately made a practical test by obtaining several pieces of carbonate from different locations and placing them in the bottom of this barrel. I then filled it with dirt and packed it firmly in. Then having marked the location of each piece of carbonate I passed the oreoscope over the dirt. Immediately on reaching the spot where the carbonate was buried a soft musical note came from the tuning fork, also three distinct pulsations were felt on my thumb. I measured the height of the barrel and found it was just three feet. I also noticed that each piece of carbonate gave a different note. I think from this that I can soon demonstrate with this valuable instrument not only the location of ore and the number of feet from the surface, but the nature of the ore so found, as 60 ounce ore gives quite a different note from 100 ounce."

"Well, Prof., how do you account for the action of the oreoscope?" we asked.

"From motion, temperature and electricity. The motion of the atoms in the ore produces a sound; this sound is carried to the surface by electricity, and the glass tube being a non conductor the electricity passes through the tube, and being attracted by the steel tuning fork sets it in motion and thus the same sound caused by the motion of the molecules of the ore is produced in the tuning fork. The pulsation on the diaphragm is caused by heat which is brought to the instrument in the same manner and the different tones or notes in the tuning fork by the density of the ore."

"Then you have no hesitancy in pronouncing it a success?"

"Not in the least, and you can say it will do all Mr. X claims for it. I have written to some capitalists now stopping at the Windsor in New York, who, on receiving my letter will at once come to the Springs and purchase the invention for their exclusive use, unless some of your citizens should obtain the right to use it in the Cheyenne mountain district or in Crystal Park."

We left the professor recording the different musical notes produced by the instrument.

The inventor informed us yesterday that he would soon give an exhibition of the oreoscope in Court House Hall, when all can give it a test.

Little Pittsburg Matters.

The Leadville Chronicle for March 2d has the following concerning the Little Pittsburg: "Little Pittsburg stock has been decling very rapidly of late. To day it is quoted at twelve dollars in New York. The originator of the great bear move on this stock is A. W. Gill, of notorious memory in this camp. A Chronicle reporter yesterday stopped at the office of the mine to enquire about it. Manager Bearce was very reticent. All he would say was that the diamond drill was in operation in the immediate vicinity of the great bonanza. He is very confident of good developments at an early day.

Just here it is well to remark that no mine in the world has paid regular dividends at stated periods for years. There are none which have not passed dividends and levied assessments time after time. The stock of the Little Pittsburg is non-assessable. It stands to reason that in the twenty eight acres of virgin ground lying within its lines there are rich and large ore bodies. At twelve dollars the entire property represents $2,400,000. If it were announced in New York that twenty eight acres of untouched ground on Fryer Hill, lying between the Chrysolite group, the Little Chief, Dunkin, Climax and other great bonanzas, was for sale at that price, the capitalists would fairly break their necks in their rush to get hold of it. Admitting that the capitalization of twenty millions was too high, the fact stares us in the face that the five acres now partially worked has yielded over four millions. We may be wrong, but our candid belief is that the present is the golden opportunity to secure Little Pittsburg stock."

A Dark Transaction.

A rather amusing incident occurred last night; and it was not so very amusing either to two well known and influential citizens of this place. About eleven o'clock at night a watchman noticed two persons lurking in a suspicious manner near the door of the director's office of the First National Bank. He went up to them and demanded a reason for their peculiar conduct. An impertinent reply was given him when he undertook to arrest them, but was strongly resisted. He succeed however in securing them after a violent struggle and dragged them up to the street lamp where he held them and shouted lustily for help. He was heard by another watchman a block or two away who hurried to his assistance.

On arriving at the scene of the disturbance he took in the situation at a glance. Hastening to Kenney's restaurant he woke the cook and had him get up, and heat some water. He then took the hot water and a bar of soap and a large clean rag and proceeding to the street lamp, he climbed the post, and washed the glass nice and clean, and wiped it dry. Of course this allowed the gas jet to penetrate the inky darkness full on the faces of the miscreants. Judge of the watchmen's astonishment when they discovered that the two strange characters were a deacon of a popular church and a prominent legal light of the city. It seems that they had accidentally met at the place of arrest and were discussing the probable rise of corner lots and the prospect of a street railway on Tejon street. Explanations and apologies were mutually tendered and the four vanished into darkness each his own respective way.

Pocahontas.

The Carbonate Hill Consolidated Mining Co., of Leadville is largely owned in this city, Mr. C. H. White is president of the company and J. M. Dickey, treasurer. Among the leading stock holders is Mr. Mr. J. H. Van Voorhes. In regard to one of their mines, the Leadville Herald contained the following notice which like all its mining news is reliable. "An inspection was yesterday made of the Pocahontas mine on Carbonate hill by the Herald mining reporter. The claim, together with three others, is the property of the Carbonate Hill Consolidated Mining company. The workings both on the surface and underground are in excellent shape, the shaft house being a fine large frame building, with a good engine, hoisting gear, pump and every thing requisite and all working well. The shaft is well timbered and lined throughout with planks, so that the bucket slides up and down without swinging about at all, and with no danger to any one riding therein. The shaft is 260 feet deep, a station being made at 190 feet. From this point a drift extends thirty feet due east, at which point it turns to the southeast and extends some twenty-five feet further. The drift has been run following a vein, and at the end of this point the vein has become strong, about two feet in width, and pitches rapidly. An incline has been started upon it, a windlass being erected in the drift, and the vein will be followed. The present outlook is far more favorable than anything before shown in the mine, and the owners are confident that but little distance will be required before a fine body of paying mineral will be reached. The drift is extending straight towards the workings on the Pendery which cannot be more than three hundred feet distant. Last fall this drift to the east was begun and extended about 150 feet, when the work had to be suspended on it, on account of the water. The extra depth of the shaft now drains the drift. An examination of the long drift yesterday, shows plainly that it extends too high, as it runs through porphyry the entire distance. The present incline following down a vein, has all the appearance of being the proper course to pursue."

Sliding Down Hill on a Shovel.

A correspondent of the Leadville Herald in describing a recent journey to the Eagle River country relates the following adventure:

Until the point of the bluffs at the confluence of Rock creek and Eagle river was reached no difficulty was encountered; but here the trail was suddenly lost in a series of uninviting snow banks, and after ploughing our way through to the prospect incline on the "Belle of Colorado," we halted, exhausted, and irresolute as to our next course. From were we stopped a rock can be easily tossed to the river, a distance of seven or eight hundred feet; and directly opposite, on the face of the cliff, was the objective point of our journey. To reach the bank of the river without becoming hopelessly imbedded in a snow bank seemed impossible, and after fruitless endeavors to devise some means of passage, we unanimously agreed that it was advisable to take the back track and forego our intentions for the present; when, on looking into the mouth of the incline, I saw the handle of a number of mining tools peeping from out the snow. As if at the incitation of some improvident spirit, juvenile memories crowded themselves upon me, and what I construed into a happy thought suggested itself. Why not take a shovel, and, using the blade for a seat, slide over the precipitous snow banks a la Mother Goose's witch in her broom transit over the moon? The plan was no sooner thought of than put into execution, and with a Don Quixote desire, I took the initiative, without giving any probable results the benefit of contemplation. Seated on the shovel end, with the handle between my legs, I started on the perilous journey. Leaving my companions to follow in the path, if I succeeded in reaching the bottom in safety. Slowly at first, the shovel with its freight of hope and fear got under way, but gradually with the momentum obtained, the snow seemed to grow harder, or probably from the law of physics succumbed less to the pressure; and ere the situation was fully realized I was flying down the side of the canon at an appalling rate of speed, my hat far in the rear and my legs frantically fighting the air in vain attempts to regain my equilibrium. In the spasmodic efforts made to check the sudden speed, I lost my snow glasses—an article indispensable in mountain travel at this season of the year—and in the glare of the blinding snow reflections and peculiar contortion of position, I lost the little presence of mind allowable under other circumstances, and, instead of deserting the shovel, I clung to it the closer and abandoned myself to the fates that seemed to conspire against me. Down the precipice I went with the speed of the mythical winged chariots; each little promontory and shrub being magnified into mountains and forests as I passed them, until, with the expiring embers of hope, the phantasmagoric illusions of the eternal seemed crowding themselves upon me, in a blissful transition of existence. No longer was I tearing madly down the mountain side, with fear for the burden of my thoughts, but calmly and majestically cleaving the space of eternity on a golden winged shovel, angels for my cohorts and the ponderous portals of the unknown opened before me. The portals reached, a baptismal fount yawned in my pathway, and in compliance with the requirements of entrance, I plunged into the purifying depths. But alas, for the frailty of anticipation! Just as the last metabolian link in my eternal chain of transmission seemed welded, I was awakened by returning consciousness to a realization of the fact that my mundane misery and heavenly happiness were simultaneously brought to an end in the wintry waters of the Eagle river. Never did human being grasp so eagerly at the reality of renewed life, as did I. Leaving the companion of my miserable journey in the river, I hastily scrambled out the opposite side, lit a fire, and divesting myself of my freezing garments, made preparations for a drying encampment. My followers, with the shrewder sense of Sancho Panza, instead emulating my impracticable mode of transit, straddled pick handles—which were made to serve them much in the manner of a brake—and made the descent without mishap.

OUT WEST.

The arrivals at Denver hotels now average over 400 a day.

Weston, the pedestrian, passed through Cheyenne on Saturday.

Articles of incorporation for the town of Breckenridge, have been filed.

The Masonic lodge in Leadville is said to be among the first in Colorado, both as to numbers and perfection of its work.

A canvass of one of the wards of Trinidad by the enterprise of the News, discloses the alarming fact that it has but four men who are not candidates for alderman.

Buffalo Bill purchased a thousand head of cattle recently in Texas. They will be driven through to his ranch above the North Platte.

The Hay Creek railroad company, in the Black Hills, are busy at work with a corps of engineers, surveying a route for their proposed road.

Leadville's thirty thousand bread, pie, cake and slap jack eaters consume twenty thousand pounds of flour each day of the week. It is estimated that there is now a fifteen day's supply on hand.

People in the east have some curious ideas of the west. A Denver gentleman was asked by a Buffalo, New York, school teacher how many Indians there were in the Denver High school. The gentleman replied that all the Indians he had seen were at the hotels in Washington.

Says the Fort Collins Courier: "We learn from personal interviews with a majority of the wool growers of this county that sheep never looked better at this time of the year; that but little hay has been fed so far, and that the outlook for a large increase in the yield of wool over last year is very promising."

During several months last summer the Leadville Mining Stock Exchange was one of the "live" institutions of the camp. Open boards were held every evening at the Clarendon hotel, at which stocks were cried. The operations of the board closed with the departure of the officers for the east. Mr. Skinner has returned to Leadville from his winter's vacation in Chicago, and by the urgent appeals of mine owners, mine speculators and others, the operations of the board are soon to be renewed.

The Leadville Herald says: A gentleman recently returned from the east says that good mining property will bring much better prices in Leadville than in New York. The reason assigned is that properties placed in New York have to sacrifice a large margin to the negotiating broker, and also leave a margin for the promoters of the capital stock, and have therefore to be offered at a higher figure than their real value, while in Leadville a mine will bring very near its real value.

The Leadville Chronicle grows sarcastic over the economy of Lake and Chaffee counties as follows: "The construction and repairing force employed by the commissioners of Lake and Chaffee counties on the Leadville and Buena Vista road is hard at work and is making good headway in straightening things out. The force becomes a little lonesome at times and is compelled to whistle for company or light its pipe, sit on a rock and lament the scarcity of human beings in the world, but then the force is putting in its best licks, and by another centennial the solitary, lonesome individual employed by the counties at $2.50 per day to make and mend thirty-six miles of public highway, will have his job completed. Keeping county economy ever before our eyes we would suggest a further reduction of county expenses by discharging that lonesome man and the putting on of a cheerful dispositioned boy at a dollar and a quarter per day."
